

21 December 2012

There has been much speculation about the day of 21 December 2012. The day when the alignment of the planets that hasn't taken place for millions of years is to happen. Yet what is the truth about it all and what will really be taking place.

It is time for people to begin to listen to what they themselves are telling them. To begin to sit quietly in the still and understand from their own inner beings what is the right way of being for them. For this is a true time of transition. A time when things will change from what you know to something which is exciting and new. It is a time of new beginnings where new things will begin to show themselves to the world. Where new information will be shared with the people that will allow them to make a qualified choice as to what is good for them.

It is therefore not the end of the world but the beginning of a new world. A world where people will be given the choice as to whether to join in with the changes or to seek a different way out. For to be part of the changes means to change the patterns that have been ingrained within this planet for some time. To give people the chance to truly begin to know what it is like to love and be loved, to know what it is like to dance and not feel judged, to know how to laugh without taking fun of another. For this new world is to be a place of love and harmony. A place where people can feel free to be who they are.

There are many who are hiding behind their old ways in fear that if this should change that they will not find their way. Yet it is this very fear that is holding them back and keeping them in a place of lack. Imagine what it would be like to go to work each day knowing that it brought a smile to your face. Knowing that every person you greet is willing to love and honour who you are. To be able to shine like a true star and not feel that you should hide away.

All of this is hard to comprehend when this is far from what this world has become already. It is far from where we are now. Yet there are some who making inroads to make changes happen. Who are doing great things to bring a more positive way of being to the forefront of people's minds.

There are those among you who have drawn in wisdom beyond what is available to the general flow of people. It is this and other information that will be shared to help others to understand the very reasons why change is good for them. Most people understand that the world as it is has reached a negative way of being where the people are generally not seeing what things that they have that are good. Where the people are not able to consider the effects on the planet because to do so would mean changing everything that they have. Yet it is only small changes at a time that are needed in order to begin to turn this world around. It is only for some to step forward and to begin to show others the benefits of what they can do that will change the face of the earth forever that will help this planet and all that live on it for millions of years to come.

It is not a time to question whether change is coming but to know that it is. To know that there is nothing more inevitable than this. Why is it that the Mayans left out the information for what was to be from here on in. This is a question raised by many. Yet it seems obvious to us. For if we were to reveal all that was to take place before it did, it would leave you all in a place of fear far more than you are in already. For although the changes are to be good and will make a huge difference to those on this planet, it is inevitable that things may have to happen that will shake up the people to change their awareness of what is. For right now many are sleepwalking. Many are choosing not to listen to what is being said and instead to bury their heads. To settle down further into their habitual way of being and secure all the untidy ends just to make sure. Yet no amount of securing will ensure that change will not be brought upon you. This change is coming and you have been forewarned.
